LAZARUS OF HUN RIOTS SIMPLE

Early Predictions That Calm
in Berlin Was Only Temporary Borne Out With Spartan Crisis at Frankfurt.

PARIS, April 4. (By the Associated Press.) The latest advice concerning the fighting at Frankfurt and the renewal of the strike in Berlin confirm the impression prevalent here and many when the former Berlin correspondent of the Associated Press left there a week ago that the then comparative lull in the manifestations of industrial disorder and revolutionary violence and pillage of the rabble was only temporary.

Germany at that time was fairly quiet, the only important exception being a strike in the surrounding region. The March insurrection in Berlin and the disturbances in Essen, Germany and in East Prussia had been suppressed; the flame of disorder was only flickering in the cities and fields, waiting for a spark to kindle it.

On occasions, as at Berlin and in the Ruhr region, these minorities had been able to inveigle or persuade others into joining the strike movement producing higher wages in case of success and holding out the bait of abundant food improvements from Russia if the government were overthrown and an alliance concluded with Bolshevik Russia.

The factory owners feared that the radical minority might again ignite their fellows if a new strike was called under prosperous circumstances, particularly as they were a number of big establishments, known colloquially as "Liebknecht plants," where the workmen were largely Spartacist, who could be counted on to give a most satisfactory impetus to a general strike by going out in a body at a given signal.

Factory owners and others in close touch with industrial conditions regard the distribution of American food supplies at reasonable prices as the only possibility of mastering the strike movement, re-establishing industrial order and stimulating production. With the workmen able to buy with their wages the necessary food, they may be able to shake off the influence of the radicals. Without this possibility all must inevitably drift completely into the domination of the extremists. The industrial situation is complicated by a shortage of coal and raw materials. Factories are running only five days a week on short schedule of hours. Should the coal production be increased and transportation improved there would be a far better outlook for industry.

Food and Fuel Bad.

Leading German manufacturers, particularly in the electrical and machinery lines, assured the correspondent that they would have no difficulty in doing a profitable business even under the present wage scale, if the food and fuel difficulty was solved. The food situation was rapidly becoming critical when the food and shipping agreement was signed. But the speedy arrival of American food ships with food on board had already had an imposing effect on general sentiment, though distribution had not begun a week ago.

The exhaustion of the potato stocks was in sight, the farmers were hoping only to continue the reduced ration until May. Some stocks of grain could last at best only into the third week in May. The emaciated herds of Germany were no longer able to supply even the reduced ration of from four to seven ounces per week. The government distribution of bread was almost entirely exhausted.

Otherwise the rationing machinery had been set on a sliding scale on account of exhaustion of supplies or inability of a weak government to enforce rationing. The ration, even on paper, was inadequate to maintain the working ability of people weakened by four years of food privation. Every one, rich and poor, bought what supplies could be obtained outside the ration at enormous prices.

The workman, earning his meagre 10 or 15 marks per day, had been spending a day's wage for a pound of lard, pork or beef. The more unfortunate middle class man on a small fixed salary, was unable to finance such luxuries except on the rarest occasion. Both of these classes at the end of March found that, even at such exorbitant prices, nothing was to be obtained. Restaurants, which earlier had catered to customers with money and had furnished them with food, without the presentation of a card, were being forced to obey the law.

The long wait for the decision of the new government, the pressure on time to time of decision adverse to Germany had produced a very peculiar situation. The new government representatives talked of refusing to sign a humiliating treaty, but the plan of the independent socialists in their big drive for power, and is a cardinal principle of the propaganda of the Spartacists, who are so largely financed by Russian money that the government early in March introduced special emergency legislation to prohibit the importation and circulation of Russian currency.

He voices in wonderful language the thoughts, aspirations and ideals of the war-weary people of Europe.

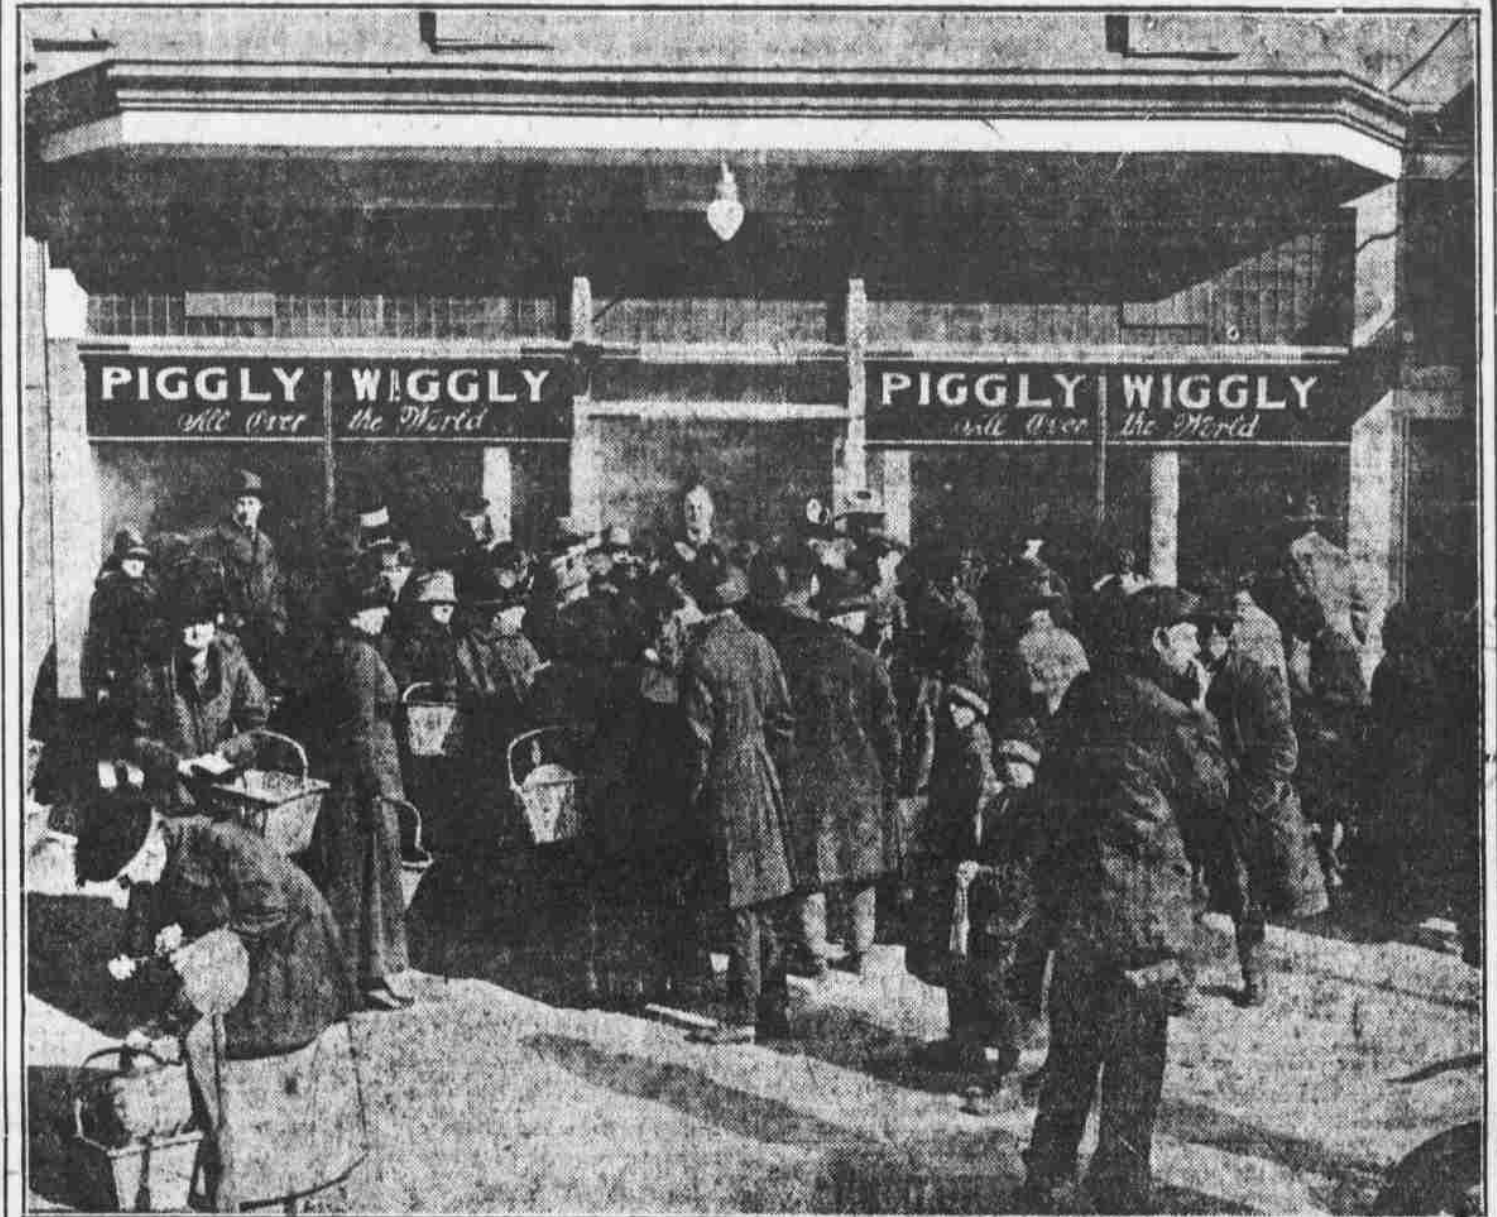

The throne of another king, whose dominions extend beyond the boundaries of civilization, is also tottering. His authority is being questioned, his edicts are no longer commands.

King Credit rules with an iron rod, his subjects are mere slaves, and bow down before him.
